PROFESSOR LESLEY PATTERSON

Professor Lesley Patterson is a New Zealand sociologist interested in the intersections of family and working life. She is currently working on two qualitative longitudinal projects: one with first time new parents exploring the division of labour in the first five years of their first child's life; the other with low-income lone mothers who are combining parenting with paid work. Professor Lesley also has an interest in narrative research, especially in relation to the negotiation of individual and social identities. She's currently a visiting researcher at CIES-IUL.
