Culture Value Orientations: How They Matter

Professor Shalom Schwartz

Shalom Schwartz is Emeritus Professor of Psychology at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. He has served as president of the International Association for Cross-Cultural Psychology and of the Israel Association of Experimental Social Psychology. He is a fellow of the American Psychological Association and a member of the scientific advisory board of the European Social Survey which includes a human values scale he designed. He has published books and articles in social psychology, cross-cultural psychology, political psychology, sociology, education, law, and economics and serves on the editorial boards of numerous international journals. In 2007, the State of Israel awarded him its most prestigious civilian prize for his career research in psychology. His current research concerns the nature of both individual and cultural values, their origins and their consequences for attitudes, behavior and both national and organizational policies.
